The Case for and Against Huffman

Editor:

In response to Denver Nelson's letter (Mailbox, June 27), I heartily support and approve of Congressman Huffman's efforts on holding the travesty of the Trump administration accountable for its obviously illegal and heinous actions, on so many fronts ("The Case for Impeachment," June 13). I dare say most of Mr. Huffman's constituents agree with me.

There are honest and reasoned differences of opinion about how best to do that. Given the White House and DOJ's stonewalling of constitutionally mandated oversight, one approach is to begin formal hearings under the auspices of impeachment, whether or not this results in actual articles. This would help to cut the legs out from under the Trump team's legal arguments as there is no reasonable doubt that impeachment inquiries fall under the oversight of Congress. Hearings would be on very public display and would surely sway public and congressional opinion.

Mr. Nelson points out Mr. Huffman's "obvious talent" and the fact that he's a "smart lawyer." He's also extremely dedicated, energetic and has proven his ability to work on multiple complex issues. One of the mandates of the 116th U.S. Congress after the 2018 blue wave is to act as a check on the Trump administration. Jared is taking a principled and courageous stand to do just that.

The disaster of the Trump presidency affects us all, regardless of where you might live in the U.S. or, indeed, the world. In the first Democratic debate, Jay Inslee said it well: The biggest threat to America's national security is Donald Trump.

New Shades of Summer – A Retrospective on the Life of June

How we were drawn into this light,
Released from bedtime curfews,
And freed from morning's grasp:
Those signatories of winter
With their dark ink now all blurred and faded.

In this light,
We might hear the rhythm of seasons,
Or trace the day's soft edge.
Maybe rediscover the contours of our soul,
Or we might just sit in trees,
With the afternoon wind still sliding through
The once barren branches.

of evidence. The result: no Collusion and a twisted answer to obstruction. If Mueller had found obstruction, he would say so; he didn't. Mueller was to come to a binary decision. Were crimes committed or not? That's a special counsel's job. A political hack writes 258 pages of character assassination and then basically says, "I couldn't find a thing. You take over House."

Huffman and his acolytes waste time and our money on these investigations that go nowhere ("The Case for Impeachment," June 13). A humanitarian/national security crisis at the border, homelessness (California has a fifth of the entire country's homeless, 70,000 living on streets in Los Angeles County), our schools rate in the bottom 10 percent; opiate addiction, health/disease issues (Los Angeles is talking bubonic plague!), infrastructure issues, the country's worst poverty rate, high taxes, housing unaffordability, our cities have become literal toilets, needles all over the place and Huffman is essentially saying, "We have to impeach. We don't know what we're looking for but we have to investigate because that's all we have." I mean, what has the Democratic House done legislatively for the good of our country?

Huffman's ilk are destroying California with their "progressive" agenda. No matter your party affiliation, it's obvious a change of leadership from the likes of Huffman and our reps in Washington, D.C., and Sacramento is in order.

Editor:

Congressman Huffman, if I had spent the last two years lobbying for my boss to be fired, I would be out on the street looking for a new job ("The Case for Impeachment," June 13).

With all the taxes I pay, I have not gotten one dime's worth out of you. Go to work, please! Do something that really matters. Trump is going to be president no matter what during the next 18 months. See if you can give your constituents something for their tax dollar for these next 18 months. Please! Get to work!

Charlie Giannini, Fortuna

Editor:

Congressman Jared Huffman, representing the North Coast, deserves heaps of praise for successfully co-leading an amendment to a major spending bill on the U.S. House floor to block imports of sport-hunted trophies of African elephants and lions from several African nations. These are threatened and endangered species and it's outrageous that the federal government has promoted the killing of these rare animals by granting American trophy hunters permits they requested.

It is a terrible contradiction for the U.S. and other nations throughout the world to ask local Africans not to kill elephants for the ivory trade but to give the green light to wealthy American hunters to kill animals for their tusks or lions for their manes.

We're grateful to Congressman Huffman for leading the push for mainstream animal welfare and conservation initiatives.

Everything Matters

Editor:

I believe the North Coast Journal of the past few years has had the best journalism in Humboldt. That's why I was stunned to see Clay Jones' cartoon in the last issue (Cartoons, June 27), trying to find humor in the Trump administration's detention of children without providing such basics as soap and toothpaste (let alone access to their parents).

I went to Clay Jones' website, where it's clear he's horrified by the treatment of these children. Humor is a difficult thing; what some people find funny others find awful and still others won't get at all. For me, at least, this cartoon completely failed. It seemed to trivialize the atrocities that our government is committing in our collective name, the opposite of what I believe was the cartoonist's intent.

We watch the occupant of the Oval Office shake hands with murderous dictators and ignore human rights at home and abroad. In this environment, I believe, even cartoons matter.

'Speak Up Now'

Editor:

I am appalled to find myself writing letters to my legislators and to the president of our country to remind them that it is inhumane to separate children from family members and cage them in windowless warehouses without beds, blankets, soap, bathing facilities or toothbrushes ("How We Let This Happen," June 27).

It is fundamentally un-American to treat any people this way. That children are being so abused by our government, supposedly on our behalf, breaks my heart.

If you are a person who is appalled by these actions, I urge you to speak up now.

'Protect our Natural Treasures'

Editor:

In a world that rushes to develop everything, we have spectacular natural beauty, a place people come to restore their connection to nature. We are a travel destination for those seeking solace. If we care about the world that our grandchildren will have, we must choose to protect our natural treasures.

Terra-Gen created this list of impacts in the draft impact statement: environmental aesthetics and visual resources, air quality, biological resources, cultural resources, hazards and hazardous materials, hydrology and water quality, noise and vibration, transportation and circulation, tribal cultural resources and wildfire ("Why I Support Terra-Gen's Wind Project," June 27).

The turbines will have lasting negative impacts for our environment, beyond visual ones. Changed wind patterns will further dry out the land, making wildfire more likely with flammable petroleum products delivered regularly.

Significant research and controversy exist on the ill-effects of the sub-audible sound waves on human health. More nighttime light will disrupt sleep cycles. The condors are at risk; the endangered species marbled murrelets are immediately threatened by this project. Our tribe's appeals for respect of their ancestral ceremonial lands are ignored.

Energy Capital Partners, the petroleum and nuclear materials transportation company that bought Terra-Gen, is a $2.25 billion venture capitalist company. They are here to make big money; The company they formed, Humboldt Wind LLC, will do that.

The winds near Humboldt Bay are among the best. RCEA already applied for a commercial offshore wind lease able to be developed within five to seven years. It would provide 100 to 150 megawatts, the same as Terra-Gen's potential, with more following. Within 15 years, we could fulfill our power needs and export surplus energy without devastating our ridges.

Do we have the foresight to craft a solution that feeds our future? Protect the beauty of our natural resources; Be a voice to craft a sustainable future. Please, speak up.

Claire Robbins, Eureka

A Change of Position

Business owner's change of heart pushes Betty Chinn's project forward amid housing crisis

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Local philanthropist Betty Chinn plans to erect a small transitional housing village out of modular trailers donated by PG&E that have been lying dormant for months on the city-owned Crowley property on the south end of town.

PG&E donated the 11 trailers — which it had been using as administrative offices at the Humboldt Bay Power Plant — to Chinn back in September of 2017 and she planned to convert them into small apartments that people could use to build up rental histories for two years before finding permanent housing. But the plan had been waylaid in May of 2018 by threats of litigation from the owners of Pierson Building Center, which expressed concerns about impacts of the project and warned that the city wasn't following proper process.

"We applaud the city for trying to help those truly in need that are looking to make a better life for themselves," the letter said. "With that said, the businesses on South Broadway are at the breaking point due to the large populations of homeless, transient individuals, many of whom have mental issues and or drug abuse problems in our area. Increasingly, they frequent and prey upon the open door policy of retail businesses, attempting to steal merchandise on a regular basis and frequently becoming belligerent and or threatening in their behavior when confronted."

The city abruptly pulled an item from the city council's agenda that would have amended the property's zoning to make way for the project and then began researching other potential sites, seemingly to little success. Chinn said she started to think it wasn't going to work out and seriously considered an offer to sell the trailers for money she could use to fund her foundation's other endeavors, which include a day center, a family shelter and a children's after-care program.

Then, in April, the hardware store's owner Bill Pierson sent the city a letter indicating he'd had a change of heart, thanks in a large part to a conversation he'd had with Police Chief Steve Watson, during which the chief detailed Chinn's good work with Betty's Blue Angel Village, a makeshift shelter village crafted out of converted shipping containers that houses about 40 people.

"Chief Watson assured me that Betty Chinn runs a tight ship and that any facility that she is in charge of will be operated in the best way possible," Pierson wrote, adding that Watson was sympathetic that the store already faces a "deterioration in the local business environment." "He said that the presence of Betty's facility could actually improve the situation we are currently faced with by focusing additional services into our area."

As a result, Pierson said that not only was he "changing (his) position of opposing the project," but he was also pledging to personally donate $10,000 to Chinn "to help ensure the success of the project."

Because the proposed project is slated to sit in the coastal zone, it will need a local coastal plan amendment and a coastal development permit, both of which fall under the purview of the California Coastal Commission, meaning a lengthy process awaits. Public Works Director Brian Gerving said staff is currently working to finish environmental documentation for the project, including an archeological survey, and will then look to develop a site plan by mid-August. Following that, the city will host a meeting to gather neighborhood input, followed by local coastal amendment and coastal development permit processes with the coastal commission. All told, Gerving said the city hopes construction can begin next spring.

By some indications, it can't open soon enough. As if to underscore the need for creative housing solutions like Chinn's PG&E village, the Humboldt County Grand Jury issued a report July 2 titled "Like Home? There's No Place ..." that assessed housing issues in Humboldt County. Unsurprisingly, the report found that Humboldt County has a disproportionately high homeless population that far exceeds available shelter space, that there are a lack of transitional housing options and an entrenched lack of affordable housing. Further, the report states, new construction of affordable housing units is moving at a snail's pace, as we've previously reported ("Draft Housing Element Calls for Drastic Solutions to Humboldt's Housing 'Crisis,'" May 23).

"The production rate of affordable housing units is insufficient to meet the needs of the county's residents and homeless," reads one of the report's findings.

The report makes a wide variety of recommendations, including that the city and county direct staff to look at providing financial incentives for people who build accessory dwelling units to help meet housing demand (something that has been done successfully in other areas of California) and that the county move forward with some of the bold recommendations contained in the draft housing element update. This included the creation of a tiny house village and a sanctioned area for people to sleep in their cars.

Plans for Chinn's transitional housing project have each of the 11 trailers being converted into a duplex and they could combine to house 24 individuals and six families. While that number pales in comparison to the almost 1,500 people estimated to be living without shelter in Humboldt County, the grand jury report and the county's housing element update have made clear there is no silver-bullet project that will alleviate the area's housing crisis. Rather, experts agree, it will take a multi-faceted approach.

Meanwhile, Chinn continues to see results with her Blue Angel Village, which launched in partnership with the Humboldt Coalition for Property Rights as the city of Eureka was clearing the PalCo Marsh of the city's largest and most entrenched homeless encampments. While the project, initially located at Third and Commercial streets in Eureka, met fierce backlash from neighboring business owners, it quickly earned their overall buy-in. In addition to operating without major incident, the project served more than 500 clients in its first two years, helping 442 of them find jobs and moving 229 into permanent housing.

The project has since moved to a city-owned lot on Koster Street, where it similarly met some initial neighborhood skepticism but seems to have run smoothly.

Chinn said she's excited that plans for the village on the Crowley property seem to be moving forward. She said she already has the funding she needs to get started, thanks to contributions from the county, the city and St. Joseph Hospital. Because the goal is to help people build up rental histories before moving into permanent housing, Chinn said the project will only charge minimal rent — essentially enough to cover PG&E bills and insurance — allowing people to save money for future deposits. New residents will be set up with case management and whatever services they need, she said, with the goal of reducing those as their stays progress before they ultimately move out on their own.

"I think it'll be good for the people," she said. ●

‘Hook, Line and Turbine’

Why I oppose Terra-Gen’s wind project

By Greg King

views@northcoastjournal.com

How dispiriting to read that officials at Redwood Coast Energy Authority (RCEA) have fallen hook, line and turbine for a deeply flawed energy proposal. Like many outside colonizers since 1850, a Manhattan energy company, Terra-Gen, is relying on local officials to support its plan to place up to 60 wind turbines, each standing 600 feet tall, on Monument and Bear River ridges. The RCEA’s Michael Winkler, in a June 27 op-ed in the Journal (“Why I Support Terra-Gen’s Wind Project”), epitomized this colonial mindset.

Let’s start with Winkler’s belief that Terra-Gen’s wind farm “can potentially provide substantial environmental and economic benefits to the citizens of Humboldt County. ... Large-scale onshore wind at the proposed location is the best choice for Humboldt County.”

The Monument-Bear River Ridge ecological corridor is among the worst sites for an industrial anything. The large natural meadow ecosystem is nearly pristine, with rare expanses of native grasses maintained for centuries by the Wiyot Tribe. The “bird-shredding” turbines would cause widespread destruction of several state and federally protected species, including but not limited to hawks, golden and bald eagles, and peregrine falcons; an important colony of hoary bats; and the North Coast’s celebrated but much diminished population of marbled murrelets.

Terra-Gen resorted to its own brand of “tobacco science” to hide these impacts. The company’s Draft Environmental Impact Report (DEIR) uses just one year of surveys for endangered marbled murrelets (protocols demand a minimum of two years), whose primary flyway to Headwaters Forest (for which taxpayers paid $480 million to protect) is over these ridges.

Stantec, the corporation that conducted Terra-Gen’s wildlife surveys, tells us that the windmills will kill 10.43 to 20.86 marbled murrelets over the project’s estimated 30-year lifespan. (Stantec, a Canadian firm, specializes in oil and gas development, coal mining, fracking, shale and tar sands mining, thousand-mile oil pipelines and transmission lines.) However, by raising the model’s turbine-collision input by just 1 percent the murrelet mortality rate doubles.

According to the California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW), Bear River and Monument ridges are “inappropriate for wind development” due to large populations of rare and protected species that would be destroyed, including murrelets, bats and raptors, as well as the “loss and possibly extirpation of a disjunct population of horned larks.”

In May, the Wiyot Tribe said the wind farm would present “un-mitigatable impacts to Tsakiyuwit,” the Wiyot name for the Bear River Ridge area, which is in Wiyot territory. At risk are “culturally important sites, flora, fauna and the remainder of Wiyot territory that is within its viewshed. The Wiyot have experienced mass genocide and been robbed of most of their sacred lands around Humboldt Bay and the lower Eel River. Much of their ancestral land has been developed, or the native vegetation types they helped to shape and tend, converted to alien pasture grasses and weeds. In the spectrum of impacted landscapes, Tsakiyuwit has persisted to the present as an iconic gem of native coastal prairie that still holds the signs of the Wiyot’s caretaking and stewardship.”

The wind turbines will be visible from just about anywhere in western Humboldt County (that’s why, in 1853, surveyors placed a monument there), especially from Scotia, Rio Dell and the Eel River Valley. Residents could suffer from turbine noise, including low-frequency “infrasound” that can cause sleep problems, headaches, tinnitus, dizziness, nausea and memory problems. Terra-Gen makes no mention of these noise problems, despite protests by virtually every community that has had windmills crop up in their neighborhoods. Officials in Rio Dell and Scotia oppose the project.

Wind turbines are infamous for spontaneous combustion, a problem far more common than most realize. The flames are exacerbated by 400 gallons of oil contained in each windmill and, of course, by high winds. On Monument-Bear River

Ridge a turbine fire could race across dry grasslands, through the surrounding forest and right into town. Rural fire departments often do not have the capacity to reach the turbines with retardants, so they simply let them burn.

Residents will also cringe while the turbines are built, which will require the following:

- Construction of 17 miles of new road, some 200 feet wide and rising through the Jordan Creek watershed, which is just beginning to recover from slides caused by Maxxam’s forest liquidation;
- Delivery of 11,000 yards of concrete to build 60 massive slabs, each 65 feet in diameter and placed 10 feet into the ground on 3 acres of scraped ground, that will never be removed;
- Six new 400-foot-tall meteorological towers;
- Ten thousand truck trips, with trucks up to 90 feet long and weighing 110 tons;
- Two temporary freeway bypasses at Hookton Road and 12th Street in Fortuna;
- Twenty-five miles of 100-foot-wide, 90-acre, clear-cut corridors;
- Nine hundred acres of surrounding forest permanently clear-cut;
- A new grid tie-in at Bridgeville, requiring a new line-transmission easement 100 feet wide and running through 25 miles of forestland kept clear with herbicides (another fire danger).

In order to give its project a green patina, Terra-Gen has amortized, over 25 years, the immense carbon front-loading required to build, place and maintain the windmills, which therefore won’t begin reducing local greenhouse gas emissions for several years. Terra-Gen and its parent company, the giant Energy Capital Partners, have little interest in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. If they did, they would get out of the fossil fuel business altogether, yet this portfolio is growing.

Certainly Terra-Gen wants to sell wind power, and why not? It’s money. Terra-Gen has accelerated the Humboldt County project to take advantage of tax breaks that expire in 2020. Less well known is that Terra-Gen is desperate for cash. In February, the S&P Global Ratings service downgraded Terra-Gen’s rating from B to B-minus, indicating “weak cash flow and debt paydown. ... The negative outlook reflects our expectations that Terra-Gen’s cash flow generation profile could worsen further. ... The company may have difficulty refinancing in 2021.”

This should serve as a warning, especially in combination with Winkler’s blithe reminder that “Humboldt has some of the strongest and most consistent winds in North America. ...” If Terra-Gen can mine wind at one of our region’s most biologically and culturally important sites, then why not Trinidad Head, Patrick’s Point State Park, the King Range, Big Lagoon, the Bald Hills?

The only thing renewable and green about this project is the money.

Like the nuclear power industry, Winkler dismisses solar power with worn-out tropes. One thing he got right, though, is that solar power “has played and still can play an important role in giving individuals more direct control of their energy.”

In this way he unintentionally highlights two points that corporations like Terra-Gen and Energy Capital Partners want you to forget: Installation of rooftop solar panels, combined with even modest levels of conservation, does more to reduce local greenhouse gas emissions than wind farms ever could while posing no harm to our wildlands. And this power would be held by the people, not by a faceless Manhattan conglomerate. ●

A Sack of Sacrament

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

A Southern California lawyer and church leader has filed a lawsuit against the county of Humboldt and the California Department of Fish and Wildlife, alleging they violated his client's rights to religious freedom when they raided a cannabis grow and eradicated five greenhouse's worth of weed last month.

In the lawsuit filed June 27, Matthew Pappas alleges that his client, the Redwood Spiritual Healing Ministry, described as a "nonprofit religious entity," was using its property to "grow cannabis in a manner that meets exacting religious requirements for spiritual cannabis of church and its related association," the Association of Sacramental Ministries, a nonprofit made up of member churches.

"The primary and central belief of (the church) centers around the sacramental use of cannabis, its properties as an entheogen and the healing powers of cannabis," the lawsuit states. "(The church) uses church property in part to cultivate, in accordance with strict requirements for spiritual cannabis used by its members in branches in California, cannabis sacrament that is used by thousands of church members that are part of the church association."

The trouble — in the eyes of the county and the state — is that while the church may have been operating in accordance with strict spiritual requirements, it was not operating within state law, which would have required state and county permits and adherence to the state's maze of regulations. So on June 11, officers with the county and DFW raided the property and eradicated all the sacrament. (Also worth noting: the Redwood Spiritual Healing Ministry is not registered as a nonprofit in California and has apparently not filed required disclosure forms with the IRS, and the Association of Sacramental Ministries is listed as having dissolved in 2018 by the California Secretary of State's Office, just seven months after it registered.)

Pappas alleges this violated his clients' rights to free exercise of religion and due process, essentially saying that the church should be free to grow and distribute its sacrament — or practice its religion — as it sees fit without state regulation, and that cutting down all those plants amounted to a punishment without proper judicial process.

In an interview with a reporter for www.kymkemp.com, which was first to report on the lawsuit, Pappas said he had been in communication with the county about the church's property and cannabis cultivation activities since last year, when code enforcement served the property with an abatement notice.

While novel, the case is certainly not without precedent. In fact, Pappas has filed a series of similar suits throughout California in recent years, seemingly with little success.

Case law has long carved out limited protections against drug law prosecutions for certain religious practices. In 1964, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Navajo members of the Native American Church had the right to use peyote in religious ceremonies and, more recently, the same court ruled in 2006 that a New Mexico church congregation could continue using a hallucinogenic tea in its services. The litmus test laid out by the court when considering whether illegal drug activity can be considered religious, is whether a judge believes there is a sincerity of belief — ie., that a congregation isn't just saying some stuff they don't believe to get high legally — and whether the religious exception would "substantially undermine" the government's ability to otherwise enforce the law.

It would seem Pappas has some heavy-duty lawyering to do in order to convince a judge that his clients weren't simply looking to grow and distribute a bunch of black market weed.

And it should be noted that Pappas, who himself seems to hold a central role in the church, comes to the case with a bit of a checkered legal past. He currently has a disciplinary action pending against him with the California State Bar, whose staff is recommending he be suspended from practicing law in California's Central District for at least six months because he "does not currently possess the mental and emotional health to competently practice law." The bar's action stems from allegations that in five separate cases he failed to show up for hearings, meet filing deadlines or keep his clients informed. While not mentioned in the bar proceedings, Pappas seems to have had similar issues with a cannabis sacrament case in Sonoma County that was dismissed in 2016 after he failed to show up for a mandated conference. (Courthouse News Service reported the story under the headline: "Lawyer No-Show Tanks Sacramental Pot Case.")

The Humboldt County case notes that in addition to the cannabis sacrament and the Bible, the church holds The Nine Epiphanies as its central scripture. According to an article in the San Diego Union-Tribune, Pappas wrote the epiphanies based on a series of dreams his daughter had after suffering a traumatic injury.

County counsel has declined to comment on the case filed last week, which seeks unlimited damages in excess of $25,000.

Husband Killed, Wife Injured After Truck Plows Through Their Bedroom

The lives of one Eureka family changed in an instant June 28 when an out-of-control truck came barreling off the street and through a bedroom, killing a man who was lying in bed, injuring his wife and destroying their home.

The couple, longtime business owners and active community members Robert Beland and Elizabeth Martin, own Humboldt Lock and Safe, according to a GoFundMe account set up to help with expenses.

Beland, 64, died at the hospital after being found amid the debris by responding firefighters. Martin was described as suffering minor injuries, while two others in the home and the driver of the truck, Ryder Stapp, were uninjured.

According to the California Highway Patrol, the 25-year-old was driving “at a high rate of speed” just before 10:30 p.m. when he allowed his pickup to drift off the road and through a parking lot before plowing completely into the home’s bedroom. Stapp reportedly tried to flee the scene but was held back by residents.

He was arrested on suspicion of DUI, hit and run and vehicular manslaughter but was released from jail 12 hours later after posting $175,000 bail, according to Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office spokesperson Samantha Karges.

The Times-Standard reports that Stapp is due back in court Aug. 7 for an arraignment.

One of the family’s neighbors described a frantic scene in the moments following the crash as emergency responders tried desperately to save a badly injured Beland before transporting him to the hospital.

“I grabbed the woman’s robe off of the wall in that demolished room because she was asking for it,” the woman told Redheaded Blackbelt. “The robe was the only thing I could access that wasn’t ruined.”

“The first responders were working really hard to keep his heart beating,” the neighbor said. “It was heartbreaking to see his wife with blood all over her face and wanting to know how her husband was, and watch them trying to keep him alive just feet away and she couldn’t see him.”

There was an outpouring of support for the family on the GoFundMe page, which had nearly $10,000 of its $25,000 goal before noon on Tuesday. Many who left messages talked about the couple’s generosity and remembered Beland as a man who always had a “smile and a kind word for everyone.”

“Our hearts go out to Liz and the family. You are amazing people,” one post reads. “Your family has help so many people in this town and never asked for anything. It’s time we all step up and help this family in need.”

Congratulations on the misleading cover art. Some McKinleyville residents are now literally decrying the idea that cityhood means big city skyscrapers coming to town instead of creating local control. The board of supervisors has more incentive to develop McKinleyville than a McKinleyville city council would.

The Administrator

Before Tom Jackson Jr. officially took the reins at HSU, he sat down with the Journal

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

When Tom Jackson Jr. strode into the Corbett Conference Room in Humboldt State University's Siemens Hall one morning in June, he hadn't even officially taken over as the eighth president in the university's more than 100-year history. That day came last week, when Jackson was given a university identification card and control over what is arguably Humboldt County's most important institution. But Jackson, who earned the distinction of being the first president in the California State University system to be on campus the day he was voted into office, was already dressing for the role. Punctuating his black suit and crisp white dress shirt was a vibrant green and gold striped tie.

Working on a tight schedule as he familiarized himself with the university he would soon be running, Jackson gave the Journal 15 minutes of his time on June 7. Campus spokespeople warned he wasn't yet up to speed on the details of the university's budget, complexities of HSU administrators' past decisions or the intricacies of Humboldt County life, but said he wanted to begin to introduce himself to the community.

Jackson, 59, comes to HSU from a four-year tenure as president of Black Hills State University in Spearfish, South Dakota, and steps into the position vacated by Lisa Rossbacher, who retired last month after a tumultuous and generally unpopular five-year presidency defined by budget cuts, growing discord between the campus and the community, and allegations that she didn't do enough to protect and support students of color. Jackson — who said he is the fourth member of his family to carry the name Tom Jackson Jr., the first being a freed slave in the South — is HSU's first black president and the campus' first leader to come from a strictly administrative background without classroom teaching experience in at least 35 years.

In his brief conversation with the Journal — which touched on HSU's strengths and challenges, why he got into university administration and what he can do to help heal inherited wounds — the military veteran was soft-spoken, thoughtful and almost unflinchingly positive. Here's a transcript of the conversation, lightly edited for clarity.

North Coast Journal: Reading your resume, it is apparent that you are a career administrator. What caused you to pursue a career in university administration and how would you describe your administrative philosophy?

Tom Jackson: Interesting. I went to Southwest Minnesota State University

— Southwest State — for my baccalaureate degree and I was very, very involved in student organizations. I ran track, was active in student government, wrote for the newspaper, became a [resident advisor], a center manager of student life ... along with being a business major at one point in time. You know, you get to that moment of, 'What am I going to do after I graduate,' and it hit me: I'm doing it right now. I'm working with students and I'm leading in higher ed. So I mentioned it to one of the professionals — two of them, the center director and the director of residence life, two different individuals — and they said very quickly, 'If this is what you want to do, working in a university setting helping students, then go off and get your master's degree.'

And they promptly guided me and mentored me on how to package myself to get a good grad assistantship at a university and that launched my career. So it was really about working with students and being a trainer's trainer, a mentor's mentor, and one thing led to the next, which led me to here. But it really started simply as just wanting to help students be successful in a university setting. And over time, opportunities presented themselves and each one gives you a stronger tool box that gets you to really try to improve the environment of students who come through the door.

Now there's noble reasons for doing this: helping students become part of the educated citizenry, giving them a better quality of life, helping them maneuver through the maze of a university system, helping them be sources of pride for their families. All of those things are certainly

"Now there's noble reasons for doing this: helping students become part of the educated citizenry, giving them a better quality of life, helping them maneuver through the maze of a university system, helping them be sources of pride for their families."

but there's pride throughout Eureka and McKinleyville, as well. That pride shows itself in the passion of the words that people speak but it also shows itself in the alumni and the desire for this to be the absolute best university it can be. Where I think the strength lies is actually in the community and the relationships with the community.

part of the equation but at the root, it really was and still is about helping the students.

NCJ: In both studying HSU from afar and your brief time so far on campus, what would you identify as the university's biggest challenges and its greatest strengths?

Jackson: I'll start with the biggest strengths. I would say that's the pride of the community. There's an enormous sense of pride, not only in Humboldt State but also in this community. And I'm referring primarily to Arcata,

We tend to focus right now on what isn't working but there are a thousand things that are working, and those thousand things are all the volunteer hours this university provides the people that live in the community that help drive the economic engine, or providing service time to agencies, the connectedness between the community and the campus — those are really, truly the strength. Now, we could refer to that as the amazing people who live in this area but I'm just referring to it simply as the connectedness between the university and the community is its strength.

It also, in its own way, is its challenge because the two talk and the two are essentially the same. And because we communicate so freely and openly, it gives us that blueprint for how we each need to evolve and become better and those are soft spots for both the community and the university. So, in essence, the community and the university are working through their relationship to be the ideal place that we want to be. I refer to that as modeling the global community because Humboldt, Arcata — this North Coast region — is a place that could be anything it wants for a lot of different reasons. But it also is a place that already is modeling the global community, working through those dynamics of what it means to be a modern-day society dealing with these types of issues that not only impact the university setting but also impact the community. But by working together, going back to the strength, it will.

NCJ: You touched on this a bit in your last answer — that connectedness between the community and the university at times creating challenges. When you spoke to one of our reporters on your first day here at the university library, you mentioned there were a lot of conversations taking place in the president's office at that point about "healing." There have been a number of decisions made recently by HSU administration that have been hurtful to segments of the community, not just the outcomes of those decisions but how they were made — and I'm speaking specifically about the elimination of HSU football, major reductions at KHSU and the closing of the Third Street Gallery — so I'm curious to hear from you how you plan to heal those wounds and prevent similar ones from occurring in the future.

Jackson: I think honestly that the institution as a whole never intends to annoy people through its decisions. It makes the best decision it can given the information it happens to have at that time. And you know as well as I that the institution is going through a correction. When enrollment dips, resources have to be discovered in different ways and the university has to react, just like the community as a whole has to react when tax revenues are down. And so in essence, just like stocks and other investments, this university is going through a correction.

During that correction, one would say, it would help if we were just a little more transparent. And so when I talk about healing, it's about trying to share more information so that individuals can understand the dynamics of the university, maybe the sausage making of running a university, so there's at least some understanding of why certain decisions may be made or had to be made. I think that would go a long way to helping individuals understand why the university is doing what it's doing and why it doesn't intend to harm anyone.

But the question I want to ask the community in that same breath is how do we move forward from that, because my message is about positivity, looking outward and looking upward. And recognizing our strengths and abilities, targeting those and playing off of those, so we can celebrate the amazing things we are as a community, as a whole. So it's, what do we need to do not only as a community but as a university to move past those things that are behind us and really celebrate what we want to celebrate as what we would call 'the North Coast.' And once we get to that point and answer those questions, I think we'll be past that.

NCJ: As I'm sure you're aware, last year the local branch of the NAACP called on HSU to stop recruiting students of color until it can effectively support and protect them on campus and in the local community. How would you respond to prospective parents who are concerned about this statement and what do you plan to do, on campus and off, to make sure students of color who come to receive their education at HSU are supported?

Jackson: I would say that students of color are not just one set of 'students of color' and to cluster individuals into one category is unfair to the many individuals who enter a university setting. Going to college is a special privilege. It's a very, very special privilege. ... We also expect things of college graduates that aren't necessarily expected of other individuals, sometimes. So to cluster individuals into one category is really unfair to the families who, for their whole life, wanted their sons or daughters to experience a university setting.

That's not to say that each university in California or across the United States shouldn't try to provide the best, positive, meaningful experience for every student who comes through the door. More simply put, if the student is good enough to enter a university, then that university has to be good enough to keep them. That's the challenge. No university is perfect at that. Some are better at it but it takes into account not only the university's ability to do it but also the individual's ability to do it.

You and I both know it's not intended to be an easy success story. It's intended to be challenging. And those challenges are often (faced) in a controlled setting at the university. So dealing with injustices, whatever they may be, is very important to the growing process of an individual because a university life compares nothing to the life we have to live after the university life. College was a long time ago for me. A lot more has happened that has challenged me after college than in college. And so that's what we're preparing our students to really do.

So I want every student of color not to just react to that one moment or those singular statements, recognizing that it is a process and that's what separates those who finish from those who don't start. I want every student of color to come to this university and help this university be the absolute best it can be.

NCJ: I wanted to end on a personal note. Obviously, accepting a position like this, uprooting your family and moving them across the country, there's a professional element to a decision like that but there's also a very personal element. Personally speaking, why did you feel Humboldt County was a good place to move your family to, a good place for you guys to live that next chapter together?

Jackson: Let me go back a couple of segments just before then. I was at a university, coming up through the ranks. I already told the story about the first professional position I had and one leading to the next. Somewhere in there, I became a vice president, twice. And colleagues around me, including myself, would say, 'Why aren't there more women of color and men of color in positions of presidents?' And the easy answer was none of us were aspiring to them. It wasn't that we were trying, it was that we liked the jobs we had.

I really enjoyed being a vice president for student affairs. One could say it's one of the best jobs on the planet, working with students and doing all the things we get to do on a regular basis. But if we're going to try to get more people in the ranks of the presidency, someone has to say, 'I'm going to give up a really good job to take a presidency,' not knowing it's also a really good job with different challenges. So I heard that call and I said, 'Well, I've got to at least adhere to some of the same challenges that others are challenging me to do,' so I took it.

I went after a presidency and fortunately it was Black Hills State University that provided me the perfect opportunity to lead, I believe, a fantastic university, one that my daughter, I hope, will graduate from one day. I can't say anything bad about Black Hills State University. I led it and it's a beautiful, wonderful university.

But we also knew that we had the skillsets and Humboldt was looking for a leader to follow the leadership of President Rossbacher — and there's some similarities, not only the natural beauty and the ocean, but a regional, remote area that played, I think, fairly nicely with things that we thought were very important to us as a family and so we put our name into the hat. And you never know. It's not something that is given by any measure.

We just hope we're given the chance and we do the absolute best we can and maybe by the end of a dozen years, or however long they let us stay here, people will look back and say, 'They did the best they could and the place is better as a result of it.' But it leads me back to the very first point I made, which is, I do what I do to provide the best positive, meaningful experience for our students. And I can start every day with that and I know at the end of every day I've done something to at least make it more meaningful. ●

Ten Items or Fewer:

Little Japan edition

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Maybe you're already swinging by Little Japan (2848 F St., Eureka) for the sushi-grade fish in the freezer (where else are you going to get a single curled octopus tentacle?), mochi sweets or pillow-sized bags of short-grain fancy rice. But the little Henderson Center shop is packed with Japanese goodies and cult faves. Here's a quick list to fill your tiny double-decker cart.

Miso. For those of us for whom miso soup is a staple, the relief of not having to haul a trunk full of this stuff back from San Francisco is very real. For those wondering why their miso soup at home isn't turning out like their auntie's or the bowls at restaurants: It's your miso. For $5.99, you can pick up a little tub of organic soybean paste or the kind with the dashi already added — no judgement. For the latter, simply boil your vegetables, tofu and whatnot, turn down the heat and dissolve the paste completely. Done.

Soy sauce. Calling it now: Fancy soy sauce is the new fancy olive oil. At least it should be. The Shoda Marudaizu Shoyu is rich and intense ($9.99). Use it to finish dishes, to dip, to pour at the table and for host gifts. Keep it in the fridge because it kind of tastes better and if you don't, my mother will know and you don't want that.

Candy. Small as the store is, the snack aisle still overwhelms. You can't lose with creamy, hard-then-taffy-like White Rabbit candy wrapped in an inner layer of edible rice paper, a Chinese classic since the 1940s. Grab some gummies, too — softer, springier and mind-blowingly flavored. Team muscat grape and peach, here. And are those bags of Kit Kats in strawberry cheesecake and miso flavor? Yes. Because in Japan, Kit Kat bars change seasonally and bank on novelty. Expect to see a constantly changing roster of at least half dozen flavors here.

Soft drinks. Let's have more sugar in the form of these drinks for around $2 each. Sure, there's strong green tea and ginseng elixir, but dig the neon green of this melon soda (make a vanilla float — 127 million people can't be wrong). The classic ramune (pronounced ra-mu-nay) soda requires forcing a glass ball into the bottle neck to open — safer than it sounds! — so ask the staff for help if you're new or rusty. Creamy milk tea, yogurty fruit-flavored Calpico and a maneki neko (lucky cat) soda that tastes like honey or brown sugar, or ... you know, whatever. Look at that adorable cat!

Kitchen gadgets. For the serious chef, there's a glass case of very good knives. For the rest of us, there's a whole wall of squeeze-worthy things to mold rice into pandas, sweet bento boxes, egg slicers, itty-bitty sieves and, best of all, crab scissors and pickers. These skinny tools that crack, snip and empty out a shell are the only way to get every last morsel out of a crab without looking like an otter in a messy shirt.

Sake. The hardcore enthusiast will surely find something special on the shelves and the novice need only ask for a recommendation. A smooth, lightly sweet and fragrant option to enjoy cold is the junmai ginjo sake from Yoshi No Gawa on special for $19.99. During summer picnic season, consider a pop top ($4-$7). Yup. Single servings to put in the cooler and pop open, no tiny cups or decanter required. Is that a samurai fox and a little cartoon dog with an upended bowl of ramen on his head? Yes. Kampai.

Noodles. We've covered some of the legion instant ramen offerings here ("Ramen Rumble," Aug. 25, 2016) and we still stand by our favorite Myojo Chukazanmai ($2.19). But there's more to explore, like dry green tea soba ($6.49) and the fresh udon and ramen in the freezer. The spicy sesame tan tan ramen with fresh noodles is the best way to up your home ramen game without spending 24 hours roasting and boiling pork bones.

Kewpie mayonnaise. If you have already tasted the contents of the iconic red-capped squeeze bottle with the little baby on the front, you already know it's good on everything ($5.99). If not, don't resist. Fries, sandwiches, potato salad, leftover spaghetti, pizza. (Spins in chair, cackling.) Soon you'll see. Then you'll be ready for its cousin, the Kewpie Deep Roasted Sesame Dressing ($3.59), which will make you flip a table the next time you're served the orange stuff in a Japanese restaurant.

Dishes. Browse the blue and white traditional bowls, ceramic soup spoons, dipping dishes, rice bowls and tea cups — something will speak to you. This trio, with their respective crab ($4.50), origami ($3.49) and cherry blossom ($8) motifs are exactly the sort of things you buy as a gift and then keep. Don't sleep on the sets of chopsticks near the counter, either.

Chips. Take a break from the Extreme Doritos and Hot Cheetos that blew out your taste receptors for a minute and try the relatively mild Calbee baked wasabi shrimp chips ($2.19) and nori potato chips ($4.69). They're wonderful and as addictive as their hardcore western counterparts, which will absolutely still be there when you've finished these.

Bonus

Socks. In this hard and cynical world, allow yourself to be charmed by whimsical split-toed tabi socks adorned with pandas, cats and majestic Hokusai waves ($5). There are socks with individual toes, too, for those with more patience. ●

Summer Stories and Floating Worlds

Group shows at Redwood Arts Association and Brenda Tuxford Gallery

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Summer is the season for group exhibitions. The 61st annual open-call summer exhibition at Redwood Arts Association, held in honor of longtime member Julia Bednar, opens this month with an un-themed show of mostly painting and photography on both floors. A couple blocks away at the Ink People's Brenda Tuxford Gallery, a themed group exhibition titled Floating Worlds puts together a roster of artists who are, in the words of curator Grethe von Frausing-Borch, "looking back at looking forward to the glamor of adulthood."

"This show ... explores the theme of what we thought being an adult would be like as a kid. Think of it as sort of a personal retro-futurism," Von Frausing-Borch writes. Several of her own watercolor paintings are in the show; they "explore a fantasy of adulthood created from the television, movies, books and magazines (I) absorbed as a child." Small, impressionistic renderings in loose curving brushstrokes illustrate scenes from this small girl's touchingly anachronistic maturity-idyll: Delicate, doll-like figures promenade in couture, recline glamorously on beaches and dance the tango with faceless tuxedoed males. "King of Diamonds," by Arupa, delivers differently on the exhibition brief by centering an abstracted face on a diamond-shaped field, presenting adult cognizance as an inward turn. Smiling lips, sleepy-lidded eyes and pendulous gauged earlobes make shorthand for the life contemplative; rays streaming from a diamond-shaped third eye suggest the astral plane.

A couple of blocks away, the RAA group show is strong on landscape and nature scenes. Representations of local places, birds and animals range from pen and ink contour drawing (Karen Merry's "Dragon, Jellies and Frogfish") and plein-air watercolor (John P. Jameton's "Arcata Marsh") to expressionistic gouache (Elsie Mendes' attentively observed "Mother Goose with Goslings"). As ever, an open-call exhibition format makes for an unfocused, yet predictable viewing experience. But there are artworks here with the capacity to surprise and charm.

The imagery in Katie Pasquini Masopust's quilt "Spring Equinox" looks from a distance like a black and white screen being splashed with golden light. Up close you can see that the effect is being generated by dozens or perhaps hundreds of individually stitched fabric pieces shaped like circles, spirals and lozenges. The bubbled texture of many fabrics adds a dimension of volumetric relief. Yael Burkes' untitled fiber piece, mounted horizontally on the wall, presents an undulating surface of interlocking fibers in melting sunset colors that could describe forms at either macro or micro scale. Taken in conjunction with the strong fiber-arts exhibition RAA mounted this spring, these pieces speak to the quality of the work being produced locally in this medium.

The same is true of photography. In Jon Exley's panoramic "Garment Party," colorful T-shirts printed with radiating hippie emblems twist in the wind, alligator-clipped by wire hangers against a blue and gold California landscape. It's disorienting — one part kite festival, one part cipher for an embodied human gathering. A very different photograph, Diane Schoenfeld's silver gelatin print "Woman with Her Beloved Dogs" frames a woman and two shaggy-jawed wolfhounds as shifting apex points of an isosceles triangle. While it's interesting to see how making a classic triad portrait composition multi-species can enliven it — what lingers in the memory is the intensity of the subject's look and the state of rapt absorption the photographer captured. Schoenfeld's formally elegant, psychologically incisive photographs have made solo appearances in several RAA group shows now; hopefully soon we'll have a chance to see them in one another's company.

Amidst competent renderings of marshes around Humboldt Bay and snow-capped Trinity Alps, Irina Abolasik's abstract painting "Universe Impressions from Humboldt" is an outlier: It says more about the human dimension of the place. It's a murky expanse of green-blue paint shot through with jagged streaks of light and populated with wiggly protoplasmic forms, looking exactly as if someone had been blowing an epic series of smoke rings in Eureka on a sunny day and then those concentric rings kept on floating until they hit the atmosphere's outer reaches and drifted off into intergalactic space, infusing the cosmos with a homeopathic tincture of Humboldt. ●

The Redwood Art Association's 2019 Summer Exhibition will be on view through July 19 at 603 F St. in Eureka. "Floating Worlds" will be on view at the Brenda Tuxford Gallery at 525 Seventh St. in Eureka through July 27.

An Eye to the Sky

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

It's the Fourth of July on Thursday and I'll be skipping that day here this week. After all, what could I really suggest for you that would outshine this evening's celebration of bellicosity and fireworks?

Nothing. Which is exactly how I feel about this holiday in the age of Mitch McConnell. No push toward a central patriotism or a great love of the national narrative. Just a blank dullness. As long as we remain a nation of bigots and reactionary dipshits at permanent war to preserve the power of a ruling class more evil and bloodthirsty than any monarchy in history, this native son has no love to give on the fourth. I am happy to celebrate the eternal spirit of revolution, however, as well as justice, liberty, humanity and the better angels of our nature, which are all things worth pursuing any day of the year. As I write this there are tanks massing in Washington, D.C., for a parade that will in all likelihood serve less as a paean to our country and fellow citizens and more as a low tribute to the insane Freudian death drive of our worst politicians and the absolutely ugliest form of human expression we know: war. And who are the pundits and leaders who casually mention bombings and invasions like they're talking to the caterers? To a person they are cowards, all of them. From John Bolton to Donald Trump, these people look like they would have to be hospitalized with a nervous breakdown if you popped a balloon behind them. If there is anything worth celebrating, it is the resilience and inventiveness of humanity, with a prayer to the future that we can eventually create a government that won't just hand the reins over to the wealthiest and morally void minority to cull profit out of our mass destruction. That if we work and organize enough, we will eventually get to "of the people, by the people, for the people."

Keep on rockin' in the free world.

Friday

The Siren's Song is hosting an evening of freaky, improvisational folk music tonight at 7 p.m. Andrew Weathers is a solo composer who specializes in developing wild sounds out of acoustic properties, while Blaine Todd deconstructs the nature of a singer/songwriter until the resulting distillation steams in Americana abstraction. Both artists are highly active in the world of production and label running. The local scene will be represented by the transubstantial supergroup Medicine Baul as well as an exercise in American acoustic primitivism provided by Die Geister Beschwören ($5).

Saturday

It's Arts Alive! in Eureka, which means there will be a great many musicians playing their hearts out for free within walking distance of one another on this beautiful summer evening. May I recommend a couple of sets? Fiddler Rosalind Parducci from local neo-folk trio No Pardon will be playing at Arts and Drafts at 7 p.m., while the Jim Lahman Band will be rocking it over at Phatsy Kline's an hour later. If Eureka's not your scene, have no fear. There are a couple of dance parties happening in other burgs. The Jam is hosting a reoccurring house, dubstep, and drum and bass event called dConstructive tonight at 9:30 p.m. Just $5 will let you inside where you can dance to the sounds generated by Monsieur, Badam and Sudakra. If you like your sounds a little more canned and with a world-beat flavor, the Logger Bar is hosting Culture Clash around the same time. It's a DJ-curated dance-stravaganza with an emphasis on reggae and Afro-beat tunes from the '80s and beyond. And it's freeeeeeee.

Sunday

Our local PBS affiliate station KEET TV is hosting a free songwriting workshop at the Arcata Playhouse today at 10 a.m. Join local pros Jeff DeMark and Jan Bramlett as they walk you through the process of unlocking your own inner musical storyteller, with tips on how to stylishly shape your sentiments into a finished song worthy of an audience.

Monday

The Savage Henry Comedy Club is hosting a free recording of its comedy podcast tonight at 7 p.m. If you have ever felt like you wanted to be a part of the exciting world of podcasting but didn't have much to offer content-wise, never fear: You can be immortalized among the stars as a part of that most venerable of institutions, the live studio audience.

Lancaster, Pennsylvania's Mary Wander is a singer/songwriter whose folk-punk songs wander through the streets of love, gender and contemporary politics. Tonight they will be at the Outer Space where they will be joined by the similarly-minded local heroes in Blood Hunny, as well as the truly magical starlight darlings of Wild Abandon at 7 p.m. ($5-$20 sliding scale).

Wednesday

Whomp Whomp Wednesday rolls out at the Jam again. Tonight's show is titled "A Path to Northern Nights" and will feature artists who are sympatico with the cybernetic forest adventure that is coming up fast in a couple of weeks. The doors open at 9:30 p.m., and this evening's curators are Trevor Kelly, Dov1, G.I.R. and Hypha. Admission is $15, $12 if you score advance tickets, which might not be a bad idea because this one can get packed. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Art is alive and well-represented in the form of Jeff DeMark and Jason Marak, two writers appearing Saturday, July 6 from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at Booklegger (free). DeMark will read new poems and short fiction, as well as perform original songs. Marak will read from a group of 100-word flash fiction stories that are part of a hybrid visual/literary project.

Who's a good dog? They ALL are! See our four-legged friends strut their stuff at The Lost Coast Kennel Club Dog Shows July 5-7 from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Humboldt County Fairgrounds (free, parking fee). The AKC dog shows are three days of conformation, obedience, rally and Fast CAT (sounds fun, right?). There will be a puppy class and a Pee Wee class for handlers aged 5-9.

Is it us or is it hot in here? Red Light in Blue Lake: An Adult Cabaret Mad River Festival's tantalizing late-night-adults-only cabaret gets things swinging Friday and Saturday July 5 and 6 starting at 10 p.m., and Sunday, July 7 at 8 p.m. at Dell'Arte's Carlo Theatre ($20). It's a sizzling summer evening of burlesque, comedy, music and cocktails for the 18 and up set.

Boom, Crack, Sizzle

Oh, summer, you sunny season of hot dogs, baseball, swimming at the lake. Sure, Memorial Day kicks it off, but the Fourth of July kicks it in. So, where are things crack-a-lackin'? There are celebrations across the county where you can wave the red, white and blue and wish America a happy birthday. From hometown parades to fireworks over the bay, here's what's hot this Independence Day.

The Arcata Chamber of Commerce puts on a heck of a party at the Arcata Plaza each year during its Fourth of July Jubilee & Bubbles Promenade (free). The fun starts with a bubbles parade starting at (one guess) the Bubbles store at 10 a.m. (the first 100 families receive free bubbles), then parading to the plaza. The fun flows all day (until 5 p.m.) with music from The Undercovers, Lyndsey Battle, Stevie Culture & the Irie Rockers, Conman Bolo and Community African Dance & Drum Arcata. Kids' activities include a premiere skateboarding experience for all ages, kids zone, face painting, bean bag toss, wax hands, performances by the Humboldt Aerial Collective, breakdancing with the Humboldt Rockers, craft booths and Humboldt Crabs Baseball players signing autographs. Save room for all the food and beer/wine booths.

Across the bay in Eureka's historic Old Town, Eureka Main Street's Fourth of July Festival from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. offers family fun with blocks and blocks of activities, including four stages of live music, food stalls, arts and crafts vendors, kids' activities, boat rides on the Madaket, Old Town carriage rides and Timber Heritage Association speeder crew car rides. Keep an eye out for a photo op with Uncle Sam, who'll be strolling about from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Over at the Historic Eagle House from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., enjoy more live music, barbecue, a cake walk, an evening DJ dance party and more.

It's small-town Americana at its finest in Ferndale, when the Fourth of July Parade meanders down Main Street on July 4, starting at 10 a.m. and Ferndale volunteer firefighters celebrate Independence Day with engine rides for kids from 10 a.m. to noon.

Shelter Cove offers up a slew of fun for folks heading over the hill and to the shore. Gypso Ale Mill is having a Fourth of July Extravaganza from noon to 10 p.m. with live music, contests, vendors and other patriotic events. Over at the Shelter Cove Commu- nity Clubhouse, it's the Shelter Cove July Fourth Art and Craft Show from noon to 6 p.m., where local artisans will be selling their wares. Declare your independence from hunger at the Firefighters BBQ and Pioneer Bake Sale, and enjoy a hometown parade in this exquisite beach town.

When you're ready for things that go boom in the night, head to Eureka or Southern Humboldt for the area's two professional fireworks displays (Fortuna does the deal in Newburg Park on July 3).

In Eureka, fireworks start over the bay at 10 p.m. Line up along the boardwalk or along First Street from the Adorni Center to Madaket Plaza for the best views (free). In SoHum, watch the skies light up in Benbow at the Fourth of July Fireworks Show at Benbow Lake State Recreation Area (free to view from Benbow Lake, $8 per car day-use fee).

Finally, Arcata pet owners, don't put away those ThunderShirts just yet. On Saturday, July 6 there will be a fireworks show after the Humboldt Crabs game (usually beginning around 9:30 or 10 p.m.). The booms should only last about 5 to 10 minutes, but don't let the fur fly. Keep 'em inside, safe and secure.

Yesterday is Sweet and Corny

And why the hell not?

Reviews

YESTERDAY. I wouldn't call Danny Boyle one of my favorite directors. He can tend toward narrative overreach, treacly sentimentality and visual excess. Still, he's been showing up and doing the work for oh, 25 years now — at least in the world of features, since he was directing television for a while before the debut of Shallow Grave in 1994. I missed that early work but like so many of my generation was quickly swept up in the bipolar hysteria of Trainspotting (1996), an endlessly inventive demonstration of new ways to place and move a camera within a scene, to use popular music and editing just as forcefully as the images on screen. That movie served to both expand our worldview and announce the arrival of a number of significant talents, Boyle first among them for me, though Ewan McGregor, Jonny Lee Miller and Kelly Macdonald are no slouches.

Trainspotting left such an impression (admittedly a perhaps hormonally charged one), that Boyle's subsequent work made me feel as if he had wandered off the path. At the time I wanted more sordid drug movies with dazzling dolly work; lovers on the run scrutinized by angels (A Life Less Ordinary, 1997) didn't really fit the frame into which I had forced him. And so, over the years, I checked in with his work but relatively infrequently. His 28 Days Later ... (2002) did fun new things with the zombie genre (walkers, brain-eaters, whichever. Don't @ me). Slumdog Millionaire (2008) was perhaps over-praised, particularly by the Academy, but I was just as entranced by it on first viewing as everybody else. Ditto 127 Hours (2010). Steve Jobs (2015), I thought, represented some of Boyle's most mature, sophisticated work but seemed to be met with a general shrugging of the shoulders.

Point being, although I admire much of Boyle's work, his sense of adventure, re-invention and willingness to try (and fail), I'm anything but a completist. I've skipped over some of his kids' movies, for example, and T2 Trainspotting (2017) looked too strained to bother with. And therein lies the balance because with daring and comfort with risk comes inevitable failure. And when you're making movies for the global market, those shortcomings play out on a pretty big stage.

And so I approached Yesterday with enthusiasm tempered with trepidation: Not only would this seem to represent Boyle's most anti-Trainspotting impulses, it is also scripted by Richard Curtis, a writer likewise given to sometimes ill-conceived grand gestures and maudlin pap. It's become cool, in recent years, to hate on Curtis' Love Actually. (I get it but I still like it.) And therein lies the tension.

Bring together these two inarguably dynamic creative people and let them loose on perhaps their most deceptively high-concept story to date, one that could slide very easily over the precipice into the chasm of pat cuteness, and what happens? Well, Yesterday happens and I have to admit to enjoying it more than my cynical Trainspotting fan-boy self of those decades past would care to admit. Is it corny and sentimental and generally too much? OF COURSE, IT IS. But it is also well-executed and warm, and I'm getting soft in my old age.

Jack Malik (Himesh Patel), a rather unsuccessful singer-songwriter/glorified busker, decides to give up on the dream of music stardom and return to his day job as a schoolteacher. This much to the chagrin of his "manager" Ellie (Lily James) who happens to be secretly in love with him. For better or worse, on his bicycle ride home on the very night of his fateful decision, Jack gets hit by a bus during a global electrical blackout. He wakes up in the hospital, abraded and missing two teeth; also he is the only one in the world who remembers The Beatles because ... well, just because. Curtis doesn't really specialize in explaining coincidence or newly introduced universal phenomena in his writing. (Coca-Cola and cigarettes also blink out of existence, but those are incidental.)

And so, with little to no hesitation, Jack sets about remembering, playing and recording the songs of The Beatles. He buddies up to Ed Sheeran (playing himself), is brought under the wing of his manager Debra Hammer (Kate McKinnon, devouring the scenery as only she can), leaves Ellie behind and sets out to make himself the biggest pop-star in the history of the known universe. Spoiler alert: There might be a crisis of conscience on the way.

For the most part, Yesterday manages to

So The Beatles are erased and yet Ed Sheeran's tattoos remain.

Yesterday

sidestep most of the innumerable potential pitfalls it creates for itself. Boyle brings his celebration of the medium into play, framing even conventional walk-and-talks with moving Dutch angles, for example. His exuberance behind the camera — and the control of someone who has been exercising that exuberance for decades — enlivens the material even beyond the childlike wonder with which Curtis infuses the writing.

But, of course, this movie is still going to be too sweet for some, too intentionally clever and cute; I'm at least part way in that camp. Also, placing all of the power of The Beatles in the songwriting Yesterday, ignores some of the intangibles about that band, the alchemy of their collaboration, and the warmth and fullness of the sound they created in their recordings. Even though the songwriting is undeniable, I question whether anyone else could really turn the songs in to classics. How many covers of "Blackbird" have you heard? How many of them are actually any good? PG13. 116M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

Seven Puzzles for the Seventh Month

(Answers on page 39)

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

The Old Bridge

Four people with one flashlight between them have to cross a rickety two-person capacity bridge in the next 17 minutes before a hurricane destroys it: Alice (who takes one minute to cross), Bill (two minutes), Cassie (five minutes) and Dave (10 minutes). It's pitch black, so anyone crossing needs the flashlight. How do they do it?

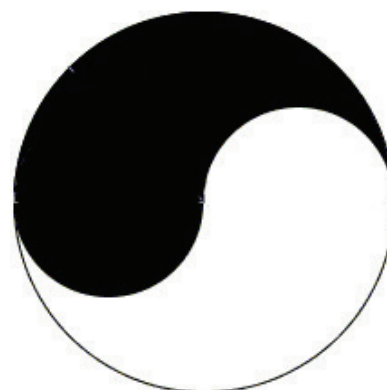

Gender Gap

In Ruritania, each couple stops having children if, and only if, they have a female baby. After many generations, what will the sex ratio in this country be? (a) Significantly more males than females; (b) Significantly more females than males; (c) Approximately 1:1

Assume: no multiple births; equal probability of a birth being male or female; life expectancy is the same for males and females.

Yin and Yang

Bisect (into equal areas) both the yin and the yang with one straight line.

Four Cards

Each of four cards has a letter on one side and a number on the other.

Which cards must be turned over in order to check if the statement "Every card with a D on one side has a 3 on the other" is true?

Harry S. Truman

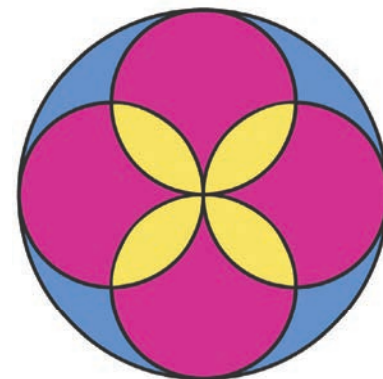

What does the "S" stand for?

Percentages

One hundred percent divided by 10 percent = (a) 0.1 percent; (b) 1 percent; (c) 10 percent; (d) 100 percent; (e) 1,000 percent.

Circles

The sum of the yellow areas is (a) less than; (b) equal to; (c) more than the sum of the blue areas.

Bonus Question!

What do Ellis Bell, Ann Landers, Robert Galbraith, Anne Rice and George Orwell have in common, literary-wise?

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF
HOWARD ANTHONY LEMING
CASE NO. PRI90137

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of HOWARD ANTHONY LEMING A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner KRISTI LYN ELLIOTT

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that KRISTI LYN ELLIOTT be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 11, 2019 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. Answers

The Old Bridge

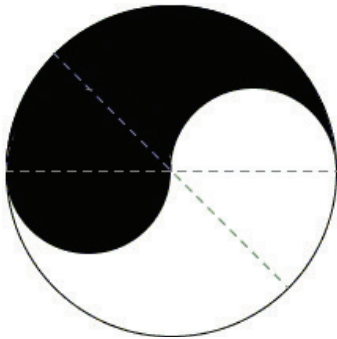

Alice and Bill cross (two minutes elapsed); Alice returns with the flashlight (three minutes); Cassie and Dave cross (13 minutes); Bill returns with the flashlight (15 minutes); Alice and Dave cross (17 minutes total).

Gender Gap

(c), since every birth has a 50/50 chance of being male. (Past results have no effect on the probability of the next child's gender.)

Yin and Yang

The small white and black semicircles above and below the horizontal line each have 1/8 of the area of the whole (since the area of a circle is proportional to its diameter squared), as do the two triangles (45 degrees being 1/8 of a full circle). Hence the white area above the 45 degree line has ¼ the area of the whole circle. By symmetry, so does the black area below the 45 degree line. Therefore the 45 degree line bisects both the white and black shapes.

Four Cards

Cards 1 and 4. Obviously, you have to check card 1 to see if there's a 3 on the back. Card 2 is irrelevant. So is card 3, since whether there's a D or not doesn't affect the validity of the statement. But if there's a D on the back of card 4, the statement is false. (In a test of this logic puzzle, devised by psychologist Peter Wason in 1966, only 10 percent of the general public and 43 percent of mathematicians got it right!)

Percentages

(e) (1 divided by 1/10 = 10)

Circles

(b) Each small circle has 1/4 the area of the big circle, so their total area is equal to that of the big circle. Thus, the total area of the overlaps (yellow) must be equal to the total area not covered by the small circles (blue).

Bonus

All are pseudonyms: Ellis Bell was Emily Bronte, Ann Landers was Ruth Crowley (later, "Eppie" Lederer), Robert Galbraith is J.K. Rowling, Anne Rice is Howard Allen O'Brien, George Orwell was Eric Arthur Blair. ●
